Politic. Although the children of both immigrant and native-born parents register and vote at similar rates, the factors associated with this likelihood are very different. While parental educational levels largely explain voting behavior among children of native-born parents, this volume demonstrates that immigrant children's education, in particular their exposure to social studies, strongly predicts their future political participation. Learning more about civic society and getting involved in these civic activities will encourage an interest in politics, suggesting that the high school civic curricula remains highly relevant to an increasingly diverse society. Interestingly, although these schooling predicts whether children of immigrants will vote, they identify politically dependent more on family and community influences. As budget cuts force school administrators to make academic priorities, this volume argues that any attempts to social science programs may effectively curb the political and civic engagement of the next generation of voters. While much of the literature on immigrant assimilation focuses on family and community, Coming of Political Age argues that schools— and social science courses in particular— are critical access points for students, researchers, and anyone wanting to know more about this important period in Chinese history.

Political Engagement of the Young in Europe-Peter Thijssen 2015-12-14 Although many scholars are convinced of the apparent civic disengagement of youth, others suggest that civic participation of young people is stable and increasingly expressed through non-institutionalized forms of practicing politics. This book makes a key contribution to this discussion by asking whether the "doer or chill" paradigm is relevant to understanding political participation of the youth. It argues that we need to move beyond this framework and develop a renewed reflection on the meaning of "civic and political engagement". It asks crucial questions such as: How can the young be educated into assuming civic and political responsibility? Why and how do young people engage in social and political action? Who are the principal mediating institutions (education, media and the family) and how does it contribute to new or different forms of youth citizenship? This book contains contributions from recognized specialists such as Canan Esfarazian, Mark Ellinas, Mary Flanagan, Trude Hagen and Bert Klandermans and will be of key interest to students and scholars of youth and young citizens, civic and political involvement, European politics, youth studies, sociology, political participation and electoral behaviour.

The Red Guard Generation and Political Actions in China-Gashe Jui Yang 2015-05-17 Raised to be "heroes of the nation," the first generation born after the founding of the People's Republic of China was raised in its political outlook and at first embraced the Cultural Revolution of 1966, but then split into warring factions. Investigating the causes of this conflict, Gashe Jui Yang argues that Chinese youth engaged in an imperial revolution from 1966 to 1968, waging a political struggle that encouraged violence as a way to prove one's revolutionary credentials. This same competitive dynamic would later turn the Red Guard against the communist government. Throughout the 1970s, the majority of Red Guard youth went to work in rural villages, where they developed an appreciation for the values of ordinary life. From this experience, an underground cultural movement was born. Rejecting ideology, these radical revolutions developed a new form of resistance that appealed to a new era of enlightenment, catapulting in the Democratic Movement of the late 1970s and the Tiananmen protest of 1989. Yang's final chapter on the politics of history and memory argues that contemporary memories of the Cultural Revolution are factored using these lines of political division, formed fifty years before.
