Critical Perspectives on Police Leadership

Eugenie A. Samier 11-22-06 The question of aesthetics as a theoretical framework for thinking about modern leadership issues in educational settings is an emergent area of inquiry that is receiving increasing attention. There is a growing sense that the mechanistic approach to leadership, which has been widely encouraged over the last few years, is sterile and that a more philosophical approach is now required. This approach is covered here, taking into account the current state of educational leadership and its interaction with modern educational theory.

Leadership and the City: Nils-Eric Stavnes 2011-11-06 The 21st century has been dominated by an almost unisonic race to find new pathways for city development. As cities seek to regenerate via the knowledge-based economy, more than ever dynamic leadership is required in order to navigate new and complex challenges while building community. This book is about generative leadership in knowledge city development. Leadership and the City is rooted in a conviction that the city is in crisis in order for it to subject strategically to major transformations and therefore a good future for its inhabitants. The book opens a fresh line of leadership by focusing on generative leaders and their modes of being, instead of spatial considerations, governance structures and/or policy contexts and processes. It investigates generative leadership by identifying the modes of leadership, power and strategies in influencing outcomes. The key points are highlighted with several empirical cases. These include Almere and Rotterdam (the Netherlands), Munich (Germany), Lund (Sweden), Berlin (Germany) as well as Helsinki, Tampere and Oulu (Finland). Leadership and Place: Chris Collling 2013-10-18 Despite the radical transformation of society associated with globalization, shifting patterns of demography and the revolution in information and communication technologies over the last two decades, we remain profoundly attached to place, with its networks of transport, retail centres and social narratives. The idea of sustainable place shaping has made its way to the heart of the debate on the future of mobility and integrated economic development, planning, housing, regeneration, education, transport and health policy for our neighbourhoods, towns, cities and regions. The delivery of all place shaping has become for too complex cross-boundary and relational leadership task - and there is a requirement for a refreshed approach to leadership development for collaborative learning and ‘transnational’ working. Going forward, what is needed is a more insightful and comprehensive conceptual framework related to the leadership of place that takes account of the paradigms shifting in economic development, planning and regeneration studies. Against this background, this timely book looks across the leadership literature and connects with the practical realities of economic development, planning and regeneration. In this book we seek to enhance the discussions of these new leadership challenges. This collect first appeared as a special issue of Policy Studies and is now published by key permission in the Regional Studies Development book series, Regions and Cities.

Exploring Leadership: Richard Fields 2011-07-26 Are leaders born or made? Does each society get the leaders it deserves? How and why is leadership ‘rhetoric’ different from leadership in reality? Leadership Development in the Middle East: Beverly Metcalfe 2007-11-01 Leadership in the Middle East has never been as vital as it is in the wake of the global financial crisis and the Arab Spring but yet there is a lack of detailed knowledge concerning strategies for developing capacity in leadership, national skills and knowledge, and organizational learning. This volume adds to that discussion. This book is the first text on the subject of leadership development in the Middle East to be published in English (reflecting both English and Arabic scholarship) and will contribute to the knowledge and understanding of leadership theory and practice in the global economy. The volume provides in-depth analysis of the social, political and economic factors that shape leadership capacity building efforts and shows how leadership behaviors and practices differ from those in the West, reflecting each one of us, social responsibility and concerns for developing both individual capacities and individual capabilities as well as fostering community improvement and mutual-building and advancing social justice and human well-being. The book reveals the complexity of leadership behaviors in the region and counter analyzes similarities with mainstream leadership, gender, climate-change and political leadership outcomes. The book also includes original insights into the role of women in leadership in business, politics and the community. This unique volume will benefit international organizational behavior/leadership specialists, international human resource development practitioners and students at undergraduate and postgraduate levels. It will be invaluable to development specialists, HR consultants and practitioners on assignment in the Middle East and will provide information to leadership and capacity development experts in NGOs and international organizations such as the ILO, UN and World Bank. Through this, Police Leadership explores how the challenges facing police leadership in England and Wales shares similarities with those in Scotland, Northern Ireland, Greece, North America and Australia in the face of the pressures of political and economic security.
