Organizing for Homeland Security—Lynn Etheridge Davis 2002 In response to the September 11 terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, President Bush put in place a new organizational structure for ensuring the security of the American homeland, creating the Office of Homeland Security. This issue paper discusses the critical issues involved in designing the homeland security organization and in achieving its goals. It compares existing coordinating organizations responsible for national security, economics, intelligence, and drug control. It then presents the restructuring recommendations of four nongovernmental commissions, all of which recognized the need to integrate foreign and domestic counterterrorism activities, although they disagreed on whether to rely on the current National Security Council organization or create a new coordinating process, as well as on the need for consolidating some of the operating homeland security agencies and offices. The responsibilities of the new homeland security organization are described in some detail. Particularly striking is the minimalist character of the responsibilities defined in the executive order, in view of the extraordinary challenge ahead. Congressional views on the appropriate structure of a homeland security organization are emerging, and these too are described. Not surprisingly, the focus of the Congress has largely been on assuring its own statutory and budget prerogatives. The paper concludes by offering suggestions about how the new homeland security organization should proceed on some of the most critical issues that it will be confronting.

Roosevelt to George W. Bush and no doubt beyond.
